Glengarry Castle, or as it is sometimes known, Invergarry Castle, is situated on a rocky knoll and embowered in trees overlooking the shores of Loch Oich. The interior of the building was destroyed by Cumberland in 1746, but sufficient is left to show how strong the building once was. "Prince Charlie" slept in Invergarry Castle on more than one occasion, and the countryside abounds in legends and tales of this romantic personage.

Edinburgh Castle is among the most interesting buildings in Scotland. It is situated on high ground, and is one of the dominating features of this beautiful city. Portions of the structure date from early Norman times, and during the Middle Ages Edinburgh Castle was the centre of Scottish Government. The buildings contain the Scottish Regalia and many interesting reminiscences of the Stuarts.
